

Aura Photography

An aura photo is produced by a bio-feedback imaging system which scans the energy of the hand.

This information passes to a computer program which creates colours around a person's image on polaroid style photograph.

The subject of the aura photo sits in front of a black background to create the contrast for the colours to be clearly visible on the photograph.

Your photo is presented in a display folder, including a colour meaning chart and your own personal computer generated interpretation. Included in the reading is a gift of a small crystal that is intuitively chosen by you.

Colour Interpretations

Right Side: The colour on your right hand side (the photo's left side) is traditionally the energy being expressed. It is what you are putting out to the world.

Centre: The colour over your head is what you experience yourself. It is the colour that would best describe you at present.

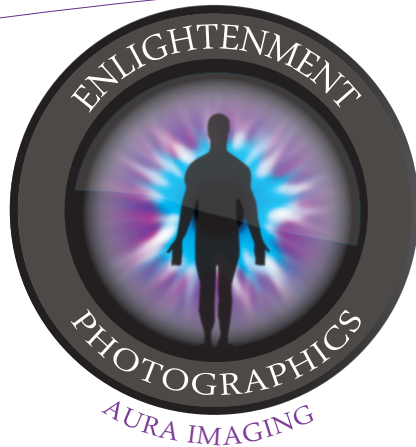

Left Side: The colour on your left side (the photo's right side) is normally the vibration coming into your life. The closer it is to you, the sooner it may be felt.

Our aura is the radiant energy field that surrounds the physical body. Once only visible to the gifted few, science now enables us to capture this luminous energy on film.

Aura photography can be a window into the mind, body and soul. By exploring the colours of our aura we gain spiritual awareness and a deep personal insight into our emotional, mental and spiritual well-being.

How it works

Biofeedback probes pick up your energy. The camera displays this information as a colourful field around your body. The colours actually reflect your physical and emotional state.

The human field changes from time to time, as a function of emotions, health, energy level, and one's views on life. However, the overall aura remains substantially the same over time. Subject to major changes.
